Raczkowski for Senate 2008

Andrew Raczkowski, a major in the U.S. Army Reserves, was planning on challenging Senator Carl Levin in Michigan, but was called up for active duty. Before having to drop out of the race to serve his country once again, his platform of less government, lower taxes, and freedom of religion resonated well with the people of Michigan. His nationwide “army” of donors are hardcore: pro-family, pro-military, and pro-life. These donors would respond well to any and all Republican appeals ranging from candidates -- PAC’s -- and various other non-profits.
